

Ghost rescues passengers from Thai Airways crash

A passenger injured in Sunday's Thai Airways crash at Suvarnabhumi airport claims that the only staff member who deserves extra credit was the one wearing a traditional Thai uniform.

Thai Airways said that none of their flight attendants wore a traditional Thai uniform that night. All of the flight attendants wore a short-sleeved shirt, which begs the question, who helped the passengers leave the stricken aircraft?

Chotisak Asapawiriya, the former CEO of Airports of Thailand (AOT), said that before Suvarnabhumi opened a number of airport staff saw a woman in traditional costume and heard a mysterious woman's voice on the eastern runway where the accident happened, Sanook reported.
